

PRESS RELEASE

Paris/London – 19 November 2020

King's College London and Sciences Po strengthen their partnership with a new dual Master's degree in History

Sciences Po's new dual degree in Global and International History with King's College London is the latest development in a long-term strategic partnership between the two institutions. As the first international dual degree taught at the Sciences Po Doctoral School, the programme also forms part of the school's internationalisation plan.

This competitive programme allows students to combine Sciences Po's Master's degree in History with the MA in Modern History or World History and Cultures at King's. The course is completed in two years, with the first year spent in Paris and the second in London.

Taught in English, the programme will accept students of any nationality and will begin in September 2021. It is aimed at students wishing to pursue a career in international teaching and research, or in any of a wide range of other sectors: civil service, archives, audio-visual and the creative industries, publishing, journalism, media, NGOs, and more.

This dual degree reinforces the partnership between Sciences Po and King's College London, which has already given rise to three exchange agreements at Bachelor's and Master's level, benefitting around 90 exchange students each year, and a previous dual degree agreement between King's and the Paris School of International Affairs at Sciences Po (signed in June 2016). This is in addition to long-standing collaborations between academics at both universities, particularly within Sciences Po's Centre for International Studies (CERI).

"We are pleased to bring together the strengths of our respective History Departments to launch the Graduate Programme in Global & International History. It brings a new and exciting component to the King's-Sciences Po partnership." Professor 'Funmi Olonisakin, Vice President & Vice Principal (International), said.

In the words of Vanessa Scherrer, Sciences Po's Director of International Affairs:
"Thanks to this new partnership with our partners at King's, students will benefit from exceptional teaching in historical research, distinguished by its rigorous comparative element. This prestigious programme further advances the internationalisation of the Sciences Po

Doctoral School at a time when, more than ever before, our institution is championing the European and international dimension of its teaching.”

About King's College London

King's is the fourth oldest university in England: it was founded in 1829 as a university “in service to society”. It is a research-intensive university located in the heart of London and a member of the Russell Group (UK's top 24 research-intensive universities). In the 2014 Research Excellence Framework (REF) King's was ranked 6th nationally in the ‘power’ ranking, which takes into account both the quality and quantity of research activity. King's ranks 9th in the Times Higher Impact rankings that assesses Universities against the UN Sustainable Development Goals.

The Faculty of Arts & Humanities at King's is one of the most prestigious arts and humanities faculties in the country. Based in the heart of London it boasts close ties to many of the city's most renowned cultural institutions, such as the British Museum, Shakespeare's Globe and the National Portrait Gallery. It offers undergraduate degrees, postgraduate master's courses and extensive research opportunities in all aspects of human culture and history, from ancient languages to contemporary film studies
